Bullying and Harassment at Work: Recent Developments in Theory Research and Practice

STÅLE EINARSEN is professor in Work and Organizational Psychology at the University of Bergen, Norway, and head of the Bergen Bullying

Research Group. Professor Einarsen has published extensively on issues related to workplace bullying, leadership, and creativity and innovation in organizations. He is a founding member of the International Association on Workplace Bullying and Harassment, has acted as advisor to the Norwegian Government regarding workplace bullying, and has co-edited two international volumes on bullying and harassment in the workplace. His work has appeared in journals such as Journal of Occupational and Organisational Psychology, Leadership Quarterly, Work and Stress, British Journal of Management, Journal of Occupational Health Psychology.

Effect of the Economy on Health and Health Behaviors

SEAN NICHOLSON, PHD, is an associate professor in the Department of Policy Analysis and Management (PAM) at Cornell University and a faculty research fellow at the National Bureau of Economic Research. He is currently conducting research in four areas: the value of new medical technology, the extent and benefits of physician specialization, measuring the financial benefit to an employer of investing in the health of its workers, and the causes of autism. Specific research projects include: estimating quality-adjusted price indexes for colon, lung, and breast cancer drugs in the United States and Europe; examining whether physicians' treatment decisions are influenced by where they train and how their peers treat patients; the welfare effects of variation in physician treatment styles; and measuring the cost to employers of absences and on-the-job productivity losses due to poor health. Prior to joining the PAM Department in 2004, Dr. Nicholson was a faculty member in the Health Care Systems Department at The Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania. Dr. Nicholson worked for 4 years as a management consultant with APM and taught high school for 2 years before enrolling in graduate school. He received a BA from Dartmouth College in 1986 and a PhD in economics from the University of Wisconsin-Madison in 1997.

The Role of OHP Practitioners During an Economic Downturn

PETER J. KELLY, MSC, works for the Health and Safety Executive in the Health Psychology Unit Corporate Specialist Division. He is employed as a higher occupational health psychologist. He has been part of the small team of psychologists involved from the beginning in developing the scientific knowledge base for the management-standards approach to tackling work-related stress in the United Kingdom and is a coauthor on papers published on the management standards. In addition, he provides scientific support in relation to mental health promotion and well-being in work for the Health Safety Executive. He undertakes presentation to a wide body of audiences on the prevention of work-related stress and mental well-being. He sits as a co-opted expert on the National Institute of Clinical Excellence review of mental health promotion within the workplace and on the Department for Health's United Kingdom SHIFT Expert review panel on workplace mental health guidance. He has a research interest in the malingering of neuropsychological impairment and has published on the development of a diagnostic battery of clinical tests for the detection malingering of neuropsychological impairment in a UK population.

Economic Stressors: Implications of Job Insecurity and Underemployment for Work and Well-Being

DR. TAHIRA PROBST has a PhD in industrial/organizational psychology from the University of Illinois and is a professor of psychology at Washington State University, Vancouver. Her primary research and teaching interests center on the topics of economic stress and job insecurity, organizational safety climate, and accident underreporting. In conducting her research, she has worked with dozens of organizations in numerous countries representing many different industries, including manufacturing, mining, construction, health care, and the public sector. She has published over 60 book chapters and articles and has given numerous presentations on these topics. She was a visiting scholar at the United Nation's International Labor Organization and served as a research consultant for the National Academies Institute of Medicine on their project to evaluate workplace wellness programs at NASA. She is currently associate editor of Stress & Health and sits on the editorial boards of Military Psychology and the Journal of Business and Psychology.

Career Adaptability in Turbulent Economic Times

DR. FREDERICK LEONG is professor of psychology at Michigan State University in the industrial/organizational and clinical psychology programs. He is also the director of the Consortium for Multicultural Psychology Research at MSU. He has authored or coauthored over 200 journal articles and book chapters and also edited or co-edited 12 books. He is editor-in-chief of the Encyclopedia of Counseling (Sage Publications) and the APA Handbook of Multicultural Psychology (APA Books) and editor of the Division 45 book series on Cultural, Racial, and Ethnic Psychology. He is the founding editor of the Asian American Journal of Psychology. Dr. Leong is a fellow of the American Psychological Association (Divisions 1, 2, 5, 12, 17, 45, 52), Association for Psychological Science, Asian American Psychological Association, and the International Academy for Intercultural Research. His major research interests include culture and mental health, cross-cultural psychotherapy (especially with Asians and Asian Americans), and cultural and personality factors related to career choice and work adjustment. He is the past president of APA's Division 45 (Society for the Psychological Study of Ethnic Minority Issues), Division 12-Section VI (Clinical Psychology of Ethnic Minorities), the Asian American Psychological Association, and the Division of Counseling Psychology of the International Association of Applied Psychology.

Introducing the First Standard on the Management of Psychosocial Risks in the Workplace: PAS1010

DR. STAVROULA LEKA is associate professor in occupational health psychology at the Institute of Work, Health, & Organisations, University of Nottingham. She is a chartered psychologist; a member of the British Psychological Society, the European Association of Work & Organisational Psychology, the International Commission on Occupational Health, and the European Academy of Occupational Health Psychology; and a fellow of the Royal Society for Public Health. She is the director of the Institute's World Health Organization Programme, member of the Planning Committee of the WHO Network of Collaborating Centres in Occupational Health, and manager of its program of work on "Protection and Promotion of Workers' Health." Dr. Leka is member of the European Academy of Occupational Health Psychology Executive Committee and chair of its Education Forum. She is also secretary of the scientific committee "Work Organisation & Psychosocial Factors" of the International Commission on Occupational Health. She is part of a consortium that supports the European Parliament in relation to occupational health and safety policy issues. Dr. Leka's expertise lies in the translation of occupational health and safety knowledge and policy into effective practice. More specifically, Dr. Leka's research focuses on the evaluation of occupational health policy and its associated infrastructures and supporting systems at different levels (such as international, European, national, and organizational). Her research has a strong applied focus and aims at facilitating effective occupational health management in different organizational contexts, with a particular emphasis on small- and medium-sized enterprises. A key theme in her research is the management of psychosocial risks and work-related stress and the promotion of mental health at the workplace level. As part of her interest in policy implementation, she has been conducting research on the promotion of occupational health and safety through a corporate social responsibility framework. She is the author of the first textbook in occupational health psychology and the technical author of the first standard on the management of psychosocial risks in the workplace. She has been invited as a keynote speaker to a number of international conferences and is expert advisor to the European Commission, the WHO, the ILO, the European Agency for Safety & Health at Work, and the European Parliament.

The Political Implications of the New Associationist Demand/Control Model:
Stress-Disequilibrium Theory,
Prevention-Only-Treatable
Disease, and the Clean and Conducive Production Alternative Economic Vision

ROBERT KARASEK, PHD, holds degrees in sociology and labor relations, civil engineering, and architecture. He is a specialist in the psychosocial aspects of work and work redesign processes and has served on the faculty of industrial engineering departments at Columbia University and at USC in the U.S. His appointments have also included professor/guest professor of work and organizational psychology at Aarhus University and Copenhagen University in Denmark and professor in the Department of Work Environment and codirector of the Kerr Ergonomics Institute at the University of Massachusetts Lowell in the U.S. Dr. Karasek developed the demand/control (D/C) model and is the author of a questionnaire on psychosocial heart risks that has been used in stress-risk studies in Europe, Japan, and the U.S. He has published many peer-reviewed articles, primarily on work organization, job stress, and cardiovascular diseases, and is coauthor of a book on healthy work.

His recent work includes the stress-disequilibrium theory (SDT) of low social control and chronic disease (including the prevention-only-treatable disease hypothesis) and conducive production model in "Clean and Conducive Production" social policy. SDT and conducive production are elaborations, respectively, of the D/C model's job strain and active work hypotheses. Together they comprise the new, systems theory-based associationist demand/control model.
