SUMMARY

The subject Social Security Law II provides a general and particular vision on the protective action of the Social Security system (both on contributory and non-contributory allowances).

It also covers the specificities of the protective action of Social Security regimes, especially those with a higher number of affiliates, such as the Special Scheme for Self-employed Workers. Also of special regimes which, due to their special conditions, require a greater attention (such as the special regime for domestic workers or farm workers). Since Social Security Law II is part of the social protection contents, reference to social assistance and complementary social allowances is essential so students acquire the necessary knowledge on all of the allowances offered by the social protection system, understood as a legal framework for the protection of independent or paid workers and other collectives subject to Social Security protection.

This way, the present subject intends to introduce students into a deep study of the Social Security allowances existent in our legal system.

For a better understanding of the subject, the completion of Social Security Law I is desirable, since it provides general knowledge on social protection within the current Social Security system.

Social security Law II will be completed with the submission of practices and other complementary activities. Consolidation of knowledge will be achieved through external practices (fourth year), which allow students to put in practice what they have learnt throughout the degree studies.
