TEACHING METHODOLOGY

In the face-to-face classes, teaching will be theoretical and practical, with special emphasis placed on continuous assessment of learning through the activities carried out in class, as reflected in the evaluation criteria.

During the sessions, lectures by the professor will alternate with various activities that require active student participation. These activities are designed to develop, complement, and apply the different contents of the course and will be subject to evaluation.

Student work outside class hours will involve both individual tasks and cooperative activities, and may be assessed through:

1. evaluation tests,
2. activities carried out in class, and
3. specific results submitted to the professor.

Common complementary activities will be proposed as part of the training program. These may include, where appropriate, group or individual tasks that are also subject to evaluation.

EVALUATION

The final grade for the course will be determined based on the grades obtained through continuous assessment, which accounts for 30% of the final grade, and the final exam, scheduled by the Faculty, which accounts for the remaining 70%.

A minimum passing grade must be obtained in the final exam in order to pass the course, regardless of the grade achieved in continuous assessment.

The instructor's annex will specify the conditions of continuous assessment and whether the final exam will be oral or written, as well as whether a partial exam will be held, whether it is eliminatory or not, and the dates set by the Faculty.

Students who do not participate in continuous assessment may still take the final exam in the first sitting. However, their final grade will be limited to the weighted value of the final exam (70%), meaning the maximum possible final grade will be 7 out of 10.

If a student fails the first sitting, the continuous assessment grade will be retained for the second sitting. If the instructor's annex specifies that any activity is recoverable, it will also define how the grade for that activity can be obtained in the second sitting.
