SUMMARY

The subject Modern and Contemporary Latin American Literature offers a complete overview of the history of Latin American literature, highlighting its relationship with the continent's society; in other words, emphasising how literary phenomena are ideological-cultural responses (correspondences and not simply reflections), actively and organically articulated in each phase of social history. In order to achieve this objective, the subject is divided into two subjects:

- Lectures on contemporary Spanish-American literature: the proposal is to approach the currents, themes, problems and authors of Spanish-American literature in recent decades.

- Literature and Modernity in Latin America: the aim is to follow modern and contemporary narrative and poetic currents in order to develop an overview of contemporary Spanish-American production (Modernism, Avant-Garde and current trends).

Thus, the course aims to approach Latin American literature of the late nineteenth and twentieth centuries within the framework of its modernising processes, bearing in mind that the concept of modernity encompasses different cultural, economic, political and social transformations in the Latin American continent. With this objective in mind, the programme of contents presents a transversal route around different thematic nuclei and cultural productions: the modern experience as an index of the writer's subjectivity, the role of science and technology, literary professionalisation, the urban vision, the tension between tradition and rupture, etc.

By analysing the relationship between literature and society, this subject aims to develop a critical view of literary representations, especially in relation to representations of gender, race and social class. In this sense, the subject takes into account Sustainable Development Goals 5 and 10. In particular, the development of tools for critical analysis of gender representations aims to contribute to ending all forms of discrimination against women and girls. At the same time, the development of tools for the analysis of race and class representations aims to contribute to the reduction of inequalities both economic and based on ethnicity or skin colour.

TEACHING METHODOLOGY

The teaching methodology of this subject is organised on the basis of training activities comprising:

a) Face-to-face training activities:

Theoretical classes: on the specific contents of the syllabus, the presentation of the most relevant aspects and problems in this respect, the state of the question and the critical approach corresponding to each one of them. In these classes, the problematisation and discussion of the proposed concepts will be stimulated in order to promote the participation and involvement of the group as far as possible. In order to follow these classes properly, the study of the complementary bibliography is recommended.

Practical classes: analysis and commentary of literary and critical texts, problematisation of the proposed concepts, practical orientation of the compulsory readings, discussion with the group, etc. The analysis of this material and the updating of the concepts presented in the theoretical sessions will be taken as a framework for discussion in these practical sessions, with the aim of stimulating reflection and active learning by the students. The teacher may recommend previous or complementary readings to stimulate debate.

Individual or group tutorials: oriented towards learning how to search for bibliographical information for study, to resolve doubts and methodological problems, to prepare correctly for the exam, to prepare research work and projects, etc.

b) Non-face-to-face training activities:

Independent study and work by the students in relation to the concepts and practices carried out in class, for the preparation of the activities and for the preparation of the final exam.

Reading of narrative, poetic and critical texts provided by the teaching staff at the beginning of the course, which will serve as material for analysis in class and as detailed study material for the exam.

Attendance at external events and activities: the teaching staff will propose complementary activities and events that, from time to time, may complement the development of the classes.

EVALUATION

- The grade for the course will be obtained by means of a final exam, with an evaluation of 70%, and a series of activities carried out during the course, which will have an evaluation of 30%. A minimum of 5 points in the exam is a prerequisite for passing the course.
- The exam will consist of the development of a topic or a series of questions, in relation to the different topics of the course, the compulsory readings and the complementary bibliography.
- In addition to the content provided, the teachers will assess the elaboration of the thematic presentation, the conceptual density, the personal contribution of significant quotations from literary works, the ability to relate to other subjects related to the content and the integration of bibliographic material (including that provided through the Virtual Classroom). Spelling mistakes and poor writing will be grounds for failure.
- Likewise, the use of sources without citing the source and the indiscriminate transcription of any information whose origin is not adequately detailed will be penalised (even suspended).
- The assessable activities will be explained and detailed at the beginning of the course by the teacher.
- Students will have the opportunity to present a complementary work to raise up to one point of the final grade. The grade of this work will not be taken into account if the exam is not passed. This work will give priority to access to Honours in case of a tie grade.

In the second sitting, the part of the exam may be made up, but not the grade for the practical activities, which must be completed during the course.

Intellectual honesty is vital in academic communities and for the fair assessment of students' work. All work submitted for this course must be the student's own original work. Assignments involving fraudulent collaboration will not be accepted, in accordance with the "Protocol on dealing with fraudulent practices at the University of Valencia", approved by the Governing Council on 14 July 2020. ACGUV 123/2020. The use of artificial intelligence tools shall comply with the provisions of the "Guidelines for the responsible use of artificial intelligence (AI) in teaching and assessment activities at the University of Valencia" or any regulations that may replace them.
