TEACHING METHODOLOGY

The teaching methodology will have a theoretical-practical character, and both aspects will be combined throughout the sessions that make up the course and the three topics that make up the program of the subject. Thus, together with the theoretical explanations, practical activities will be developed in the classroom, consisting in the realization and correction of exercises, both written and oral, which will serve to consolidate the knowledge acquired, to which also, and above all, will contribute to the autonomous learning by the students outside the classroom, especially in the first half of the course, since it is expected that, within two months, they will memorize on their own the writing systems explained in topic 0, which will allow them to later face the reading and writing of the vocabulary, grammar and ideograms of topics 1 and 2.

EVALUATION

There will be a continuous evaluation and a final evaluation. The continuous evaluation, consisting of a hiragana exam around mid-March and a katakana exam around the beginning of April, will account for 30% of the course grade (15% + 15%), while the final evaluation, consisting of a written exam (there will be no oral test) at the end of May, which will be held on the date and time officially assigned and in which everything given during the course will be included, will account for 70% of the grade. The minimum grade to pass any of these exams is 5, but it is possible to pass the course without having to pass all the tests as long as the final grade reaches, at least, that score. Absences from class will not be penalized, but attendance to 80% of the class sessions will mean an extra point on the overall grade. The same system will apply for the second call.

Intellectual honesty is vital to an academic community and for the fair evaluation of the student's work. All work submitted in this course must be originally authored by every student. No student shall engage in unauthorized collaboration or make use of ChatGPT or other AI composition software.
