TEACHING METHODOLOGY

The methodology for theoretical instruction will be based on lectures, combined with the possible preparation, presentation, and defense of individual or group reports. Classes will be supported by technical and audiovisual materials, which will be made available to students through the virtual classroom.

During the semester, a thematic seminar will be held in which students must give an individual or group presentation focused on a representative dish from a Mediterranean country. The main objective of the seminar is to promote a comprehensive understanding of the cultural and gastronomic richness of the Mediterranean region through the analysis of a traditional dish that reflects the culinary identity of the chosen country.

Visits to relevant centers related to the subject will be scheduled. After each visit, students will be required to submit a report to the instructor via the virtual classroom.

EVALUATION

A written exam will be administered to ensure knowledge and understanding of the core theoretical content of the course (70%). The exam will include questions based on the lectures. A minimum score of 5 out of 10 is required to pass the course.

Continuous assessment will include the possible preparation, presentation, and defense of individual and group reports on topics proposed, explained, and discussed during lectures. The evaluation will consider the level of understanding of the content as well as the student's ability to present, defend, and discuss it effectively (10%).

Seminar work will be assessed through supervision of the tasks carried out, with special attention to originality, problem-solving skills, and the ability to produce well-organized and detailed reports (10%).

Attendance at scheduled visits is mandatory in order to pass the course. Reports based on these visits will account for 10% of the final grade.
