SUMMARY

The course will focus on the mediator, essential in any mediation process to facilitate the democratic management of conflicts that arise between the two parties involved, promote communication between people, promote cooperation and promote autonomy in decision-making. This highly relevant function requires the training of the mediator in a series of competences, values and skills essential to carry out their educational work, always considering minimum ethical criteria, such as impartiality, confidentiality, solidarity and respect. In this way, the mediator cannot intervene in all kinds of situations or accept any agreement. Thus, it will be necessary to work on specific dilemmas before the mediators can present themselves in their interventions, also reflecting on the need for these educational professionals to have a code of ethics.

Previous knowledge. Relationship with subjects of the same degree:
