

Spatiotemporal Statistics in Real World Problem-Solving: Should We Migrate to Mongolia to Raise Chickens?

George Christakos¹

¹ Environmental Health & Medical Geography Group, Dept. of Geography, SDSU, San Diego, California, USA

Abstract: I would like to bring to our attention to methodological and conceptual issues of Spatiotemporal Statistics (STS) and their critical consequences in real world problem-solving. Indeed, conceptual and methodological issues are often more important and consequential in problem-solving than purely technical matters, regardless of the mathematical sophistication of the latter.

Keywords: Real world problem-solving, Spatiotemporal Statistics